In a last ditch effort to escape from police forces, a rape victim boarded a train in Patna, Bihar. The woman was travelling with her 10 months old baby. But, her safety seemed little more than a distant dream as the train sped ahead and the police were few close ... Despite massive public outrage against rape cases in India, this is not an isolated incident. As recent as June of 2017, eight minor girls were raped by their school teacher at different times of day on different days of week. Three separate incidents of rape have brought the discussions around these issues to light again. All three of these occurrences were reported between October and December of 2016. The first incident occurred on Wednesday, October 5th, when a 16 year old girl was raped by her taxi driver. The victim later gave birth to a baby girl five days later. The second incident occurred the following Sunday, when a 7 year old girl was raped by her 8 year old neighbor. The third occurrence took place on Friday, December 9th, when another 8 year old victim was raped by two men at gunpoint. All three incidents are reported to have taken place at different houses within the same neighborhood. All of these rapes are reported to have been committed by neighbors, family members, or acquaintances. All of these incidences are reported to have taken place around 10 PM, after the victims had gone to sleep. Most often than not, these rapes occurred in their own bedrooms and bedrooms of family members. Each crime is reported to have occurred within a stone's throw from each other and in pet houses so as not to raise suspicion about an outsider. The perpetrators of these crimes were able to commit this heinous act because there was no way for the families who were victims to protect their daughters as they roamed freely throughout the Indian city. In a sane world, these girls would have been safe from danger inside their own homes. In a sick, broken world where the most vile of human behaviors still exist in the wildest of places, these girls were not safe from harm in their own homes. Each individual case is said to have been promptly committed by a single adult man with insight and motive. Each adult man forced himself on a young girl who was incapable of resisting him or his crime. This behavior is a strong indicator of a mental disease that can be interpreted as early sociopathic behavior. As a result of these a crime, the victim's life was forever altered by a horrific physical and emotional abuse. The victim was left with no ability to control her own body once it was penetrated by the perpetrator. This single incident of rape has been reported to have taken place in a house with 24 bed rooms, all of which were occupied by families of varying sizes. In all, more than ten children were murdered in this mental home on that fateful Friday night. In each of these situations, the perpetrator broke into the room where their victims slept and took them against their will.
